Engineer Killed and Firema Badly Wounded. Engine No. 239, coming west with t train which is due in this city at 11:10 p. at., exploded on Wednesd night about four miles below Moun ville, killing Morris Husted, the engineer and seriously wounding Alexander Lynn When the train passed Grafton it was a half hour behind time, and accordingly increased its speed considerably. Just below Moundsville a rumbling noise was heard by the passengers, and after ex-periencing a sensation as though the cars were running on the ties, they auddenly discovered that they were not moving. Upon getting out to investigate the matter, the frightened passengers dis-covered that the engine, baggage car and smoking car were missing. In a few momany in the northern part of the First Ward, along the hillside in the Second and Third Wards, along the riven bank and upon the side of the hill in the Fifth and Sixth Wards, and in the Eighth ments, by the aid of lanterns, the engine and cars were found lying off the track s short distance back of the train.

It was ascertained that the boiler of the ngine had exploded, throwing the bag gage car and smoking car off the track The amoking car was thrown down steep embankment, and turned completely over. The stove in the baggage car upset and set fire to the car, burning a smal mail bag containing mail of little value besides injuring the car badly.

Headed by the conductor of the train he passengers immediately went to work ving the debris, so as to rescue those isoned in the smoking-car. Thi was done without much trouble, and the ccupants of the car, the express agent aggage master, and a gentleman a and three children, were assiste out. The passengers were all safe, buthe two railroad men sustained slight in uries. The cars lay on opposite sides of he track, and were badly wrecked. Morris Husted, the engineer, was for near the wreck, with his skull terribly crushed and his flesh scalded. It is supposed that a heavy engine spring, which lay rear his head, caused hi leath. The fireman, Alex. Lynn, was found upon a hillside about thirty yards the meeting at the Court House to-night will result in bringing relief to many from the scene of the explosion. One of his legs was broken, his head was bruised badly, and his face badly scalded. A message was telegraphed to this cit for aid, and a train was sent down which at an early hour yesterday morning brought up the wounded fireman and the remains of the engineer.

Both the engineer and fireman resided in this city. Mr. Husted leaves a wife and two children. He had been in the employ of the B. & O. Company for a long time, and was considered an excollent engineer. Mr. Lynn's condition a such that he is not able to give an ac-count of the accident, and its cause is as of Charleston; General N. To every member of the household he puts the question, "When did you rise?" and on learning he attempts to crush him or her with the heroic differences that exist between some people and others.
